Research Culture - Implications for Patient Engagement

As patient/caregiver partners, why do we often feel like outsiders in research? The Patient Advisors Network (PAN) set out to better understand this question by gathering insights from over 262 patient and caregiver partners across the PAN community and broader network. They explored how partners find research opportunities, what it's like to be part of research teams, and the challenges they encounter. Their findings highlight the changes needed to truly advance patient engagement in research. You are invited to join us for a conversation with Alies Maybee and Donna Rubenstein, co-chairs of PAN, as they share key insights from the report Reimagining the Research Landscape. Together, we'll discuss the findings and explore what comes next in building a more inclusive and impactful research environment.
